Dear Libby:

I am writing to thank you for presenting a superb presentation at the CRLA conference in October. Not long ago I received the conference evaluation report for the Spokane conference. Participants evaluated your presentation, Online Discussion Groups: Will They Work in My Class?, as one of the best sessions at the conference.

CRLA members tell us they want presentations with useful and intriguing content, and they want good handouts. They expect clear and well-organized presentations from experts and knowledgeable practitioners in the field. You are to be commended for a fine presentation in every respect, Libby.

As you know well, institutes and sessions are the central means by which CRLA members share their expertise with each other at the annual conference. Thank you for enriching our knowledge with your greater knowledge.

Will you have more to share with us at Minneapolis CRLA conference, November 13-16, 2002? If you were thinking of sending a proposal to Laura Symons, President-Elect, I urge you to do so by the March 15 deadline, because proposals will be reviewed the very next week. You can send a proposal electronically via the CRLA website at www.crla.net. Thank you again for an outstanding conference presentation. You helped us make "passages – from novice to expert, from research to practice."

Collegially yours,
